Do the Right Thing: Ethics for Commissioners

LAW

U.S. SUPREME COURT

Justice Potter Stewart (1915–1985) remarked that “ethics is knowing the difference between what you have a right to do and what is right to do.” This maxim is especially relevant for planning and land-use commissioners who are in positions of substantial authority and are privy to information often not held by others. Commissioners know what they have a right to do, but how can they decide what is right to do?

Whom do you serve?

First and foremost, elected and appointed public officials must determine to whom they owe an obligation. This is no easy task for a commissioner—is it to the chair of the commission or to the chief elected official? If you are elected, is your main obligation to the people who elected you or to the political party that nominated you? Do you consider all the citizens of the community to be those you serve, or does your constituency extend to those outside your political jurisdiction who might benefit from what you may do, such as in preserving open space and historic resources, or providing affordable housing so that they might have an opportunity to live in your community?

All those who are involved in land-use decision making must ultimately ask themselves the question of whether they have a moral and ethical obligation to an even larger constituency, one that spans time. In short, they must consider the possibility that they owe an obligation in their decision making of today to further the interests of generations not yet born; as when we protect a sole-source aquifer, a ridgetop view, or a sacred place from destruction.

Where do you find guidance?

Once you have resolved the question of who you serve, then you can begin the task of determining how you must conduct yourself. Fortunately, the American Planning Association provides us its Ethical Principles and Planning, available at planning.org/ethics/ethicalprinciples.htm. It is intended as a guide for ethical conduct to all involved in planning, recognizing that “the planning process exists to serve the public interest.” Guidelines, though, are only that. They are suggestive of how one should conduct oneself; they are not rules of conduct, meaning there is no penalty if you do not follow them. Guidelines often may serve more to stimulate discussion and further deliberation of what is right and wrong, and what is good and bad.

See a clear decision by applying the “light of day” test to your ethical dilemmas.

APA has many other resources on ethics. Commissioners may find it useful and stimulating to set aside some time at their meetings, on a regular basis, perhaps a few times a year, to review the Ethical Principles in Planning and to discuss some of the hypotheticals and problem sets available in the literature. The Texas Chapter of APA has a chapter on “Ethics and the Planning Commissioner” written by Carol Barrett, FAICP, as part of A Guide to Urban Planning and Texas Communities (2013), available at tinyurl.com/glahh6e. Discussing the principles, considering hypotheticals, and developing your commission’s own rules of conduct will help to improve the “issue spotting” capabilities of all commissioners such that they will be able to more readily identify an ethical issue when it arises, hopefully in time to avoid an error or unnecessary delay, perhaps, in the very midst of proceedings.

The Ethical Principles in Planning has three sections, the first two of which are relevant to commissioners and a third focused on practicing planners. The headings of the sections pertinent to commissioners are self-explanatory:

Section one’s seven numbered paragraphs encompass a broad variety of considerations including making available “full, clear and accurate information on planning issues” and clarifying community goals.

The 13 paragraphs in section two address such issues as broadly defining “personal interest,” not seeking gifts or favors, protecting confidential information, and respecting the rights of all participants.

If an ethics training sessions addressed just one or two of these considerations at a sitting, and worked to flesh out what they mean in terms of practice, there would be sufficient discussion for 10 to 20 meetings.

Municipalities may also have ethical codes that may be mandated by state law. Commissioners should be familiar with those codes and ask their city manager or their legal counsel for a briefing. Some states, such as Pennsylvania, will provide free ethics training on request. Regardless, your commission may want to develop its own rules of conduct after careful consideration.

Finally, it is essential to communicate with your peers and others, while being mindful of confidentiality issues, when you as a commissioner feel challenged by an ethical issue. Maybe they will have experienced it before. Perhaps they will see a nuance you missed by being too close to the issue yourself. And sometimes, a decision should be made not by you, but by someone with higher authority.

How can you look within yourself?

Two simple ways of testing your conduct to see if it is ethical can go a long way in resolving otherwise ambiguous situations.

First, consider the "light of day" test: How would you feel about your conduct if your peers and others whom you respect knew all from the front page of the local newspaper or a Facebook post? Try this the next time you feel uncomfortable about what you might do. You'll be surprised at how easy it is to see a clear decision.

The second test is the ancient moral maxim that is so fundamental it is considered to be at the very core of human nature. It can be traced to the time of the Egyptian Middle Kingdom (2000–1700 BC) and the god, Maat, who said "Now this is the command: do to the doer to make him do." It is the Golden Rule, found in virtually every religious and ethical tradition. Commissioners who put themselves in the shoes of others will often gain a perspective they couldn't see before, when they were focused solely on their roles as commissioners.

Now who would have thought that with all the literature, rules, codes, guidelines, statutory requirements, judicial decisions, and other materials available to us in the ethics arena, that we would return to the rules we learned as children? Simply put: Ethics is at once simple and exceedingly difficult.

HISTORY

FLAVEL SHURTLEFF, CARRYING OUT THE CITY PLAN

Planning lies at the intersection of governance and private property. The legal framework for planning has been critical from the beginning. Flavel Shurtleff was a Boston attorney recruited by one of the founders of the city planning movement, Frederick Law Olmsted Jr., to write the first book on the legal framework for American city planning. Historian Mel Scott writes that "Olmsted realized as early as 1909 that if the city planning movement was ever to progress beyond the plan-making stage and decisively influence the growth and development of cities, it would have to overcome the resistance of the courts to the broader regulation. . . ."

In 1914, Shurtleff and Olmsted's Carrying Out the City Plan was published, following two years of research and interviews with mayors, planning commissioners, and city attorneys. Shurtleff also researched the legal underpinnings of planning in other countries. He found that communities needed to learn from one another through shared information and from legal precedents set by the courts. Of special concern to Shurtleff was the importance of the planning commission in ensuring that the plans moved from documents into implemented policies and development.
